REPRODUCES COLOR.

McDonough's New Photographic Process Put to Test.

Proves a Great Success in the Preparation of Stereopticon Slides-Science Deeply Interested.

The McDonough color photography, used in the preparation of stereopticon slides, proved to be a great success in | the public test made at the Field museum, Chicago, the other day. The colors as they appeared on the screen blended perfectly. In the experiment the most difficult colors were dealt with, dull gold being the most in evidence. The pictures reproduced were of jewelry and vases taken from the pyramids of Egypt, and supposed to have been placed there with Queen Aahotep 2,000 B. C. Twenty specimens of the curious oriental workmanship were exhibited on each slide. The colors shown were gold, carnelian, lapis lazuli and violet. The photographs had been taken from a color print page ten by twelve inches in size. The pictures were thrown on an immense screen. The slides were used in the illustration of a lecture on "The Pyramids of Egypt," by Prof. James H. Breasted, of the University of Chicago. He spoke enthusiastically of the new discovery in photography which enabled him to present a scene in the colors of nature.

"Color photography is of incalculable importance in future culture," he said. 'To be able to reproduce nature in its original color is a matter of such great import that it cannot be given adequate expression. To show the colors of rature in the tropics with its beautiful effects is an achievement of surpassing importance in the scientific world. It is the fruition of science, the culmination of scientific endeavor.'

Prof. C. F. Millspaugh presided, and many members of the university were present. E. Burton Holmes was an interested spectator and expressed the belief that soon all plates for stereopticon use would be made by the new method, which seemed superior to the old. H. T. West, secretary of the International Color Photography company, represented those who are developing the McDonough process. The scientists at the university are particularly interested in the isochromatic plates and pronounce them invaluable

INDIANS FIGHT BICYCLE.

Puyallup Reservation Near Tacoma Wash., May Be the Scene of Trouble.

The Puyallup Indians of Pierce county, Wash., are making war upon bicycle riders. President John M. Bell, of the Wheelmen's association, has appealed to the county commissioners for protection. The principal bicycle path of the northwest, connecting Tacoma and Seattle, passes through the Puyallup reservation, and some of the more intelligent young Indians at the government school have abandoned the cayuse for the blevele.

In the present difficulty these young men are working with the Wheelmen's association to punish the enemies of the bicycle. At first the Indians obstructed the path with brush and stones, following this move by felling trees across the path. This aroused the white wheelmen to a high pitch of indignation. At this point the Indians began threatening the younger members of the association. The Indians have become bolder and have chased several bicycle riders off the reservation.

PRIEST PREACHES IN STREET.

Father McSweeney, of New York City Adopts a New Method to Reach People.

Open-air Catholic services were held in East Eleventh street, New York city, the other afternoon. Rev. Dr. McSweeney, rector of St. Brigid's church, who officiated, said that so far as he knew it was the first time Catholic elergymen in this country had gone into the streets to preach. If the innovation was successful in bringing luckwarm Catholics to a better performance of their duties, he proposed to continue it. He first obtained permission from Archibshop Corrigan to preach in the streets for the benefit of the large number of Italians in his parish who would not attend church. 130,000 Italians, all Roman Catholies, and of the number scarcely 10,000 attend church. In seeking for the cause of this indifference he found that the Italians were opposed to building or
